REPLY IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO DISMISS FIRST
 AMENDED COMPLAINT [Rule
 12(b), F.R.C.P.]

Date: January 14, 2008

Time: 10:00 a.m.

Ctrm: 12 – 19th Floor

Judge: Hon. Thelton E. Henderson

18 The plaintiff's opposition to the motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b), Federal Rules of 19 Civil Procedure affirms that plaintiff does not seek an injunction or damages against the state
 20 Supreme Court, and that what the plaintiff asks this court to do is declare unconstitutional the 21 California Supreme Court's rule controlling the creation of precedent (Rule 8.1115(a), California 22 Rules of Court). Opposition, p. 11, lines 11-12.

23 While moving party will not repeat the grounds for dismissal cited in the moving papers, it
 24 is noteworthy that Plaintiff has not established standing. As he admits, the injury must be to a 25 "legally protected interest," but his alleged injury does not meet that requirement. As set out in the 26 moving papers, plaintiff has no "right to review" by the California Supreme Court, so has no legally
 27 protected interest in such a non-existent right. To the extent he now claims his injury was the loss
 28 on appeal of his money judgment, he also has no legally protected interest in having a judgment

1 upheld on appeal. As noted in the moving papers, his redress from such a legal error is by appeal,
 2 ultimately to the United States Supreme Court, not by way of a new suit in this court against the 3 courts of California.

4 Even if either "right to review" or "right to win on appeal" were a protectable interest, which 5 they are not, plaintiff has not established how any injury to those supposed interests could possibly 6 have been redressed by this court. Rule 8.115 simply says that an unpublished opinion "must not 7 be cited or relied on by a court or a party in any other action." Even if that rule were found to be
 8 unconstitutional, Rule 8.500, which sets forth the grounds for discretionary review by the California
 9 Supreme Court, would be unchanged. As this court has no jurisdiction to order the California 10 Supreme Court to review plaintiff's state court case, it cannot redress the alleged loss of a non-11 existent "right" to review.

12 The decision in Schmier v. Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, 136 F.Supp.2d 1048 (N.D. Cal.
 13 2001), decided by this District Court, is instructive on the standing issue. The plaintiff challenged
 14 the Ninth Circuit's then analogous publication rules.<sup>1/</sup> This Court held that, while the trial court is 15 to accept as true all material allegations of the complaint, and must construe the complaint in favor
 16 of the complaining party:

17 "At the pleading stage, therefore, a plaintiff's general factual allegations of injury
 18 resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice to survive a motion to dismiss.
 19 Lujan, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 112 S.Ct. 2130 (1992). Nevertheless, the plaintiff must 20 in fact make such allegations. See Tyler, 236 F.3d at 1131 (noting that the plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating standing). As defendants correctly assert, Schmier's inability to make allegations about a concrete and particular injury is fatal to his case."

21 Schmier v. Supreme Court of California, supra, 1051; emphasis added.

22 The case of Schmier v. The Supreme Court of California, 78 Cal.App.4th 703 (9th Cir. 2000),
 23 cited in the opposition (at p. 14, line 16) is also instructive in rejecting a challenge to the California
 24 publication rules:<sup>2/</sup>

25 "However, the complaint does not identify any specific injury appellant or those he 26

27 1. Then, Ninth Circuit Rules 36-3 and 36-4.

28 2. Then numbered as Rule 977 et seq, California Rules of Court.

1 purports to represent have suffered or will suffer due to the nonpublication or 2 depublication of an appellate opinion. Absent such an allegation, appellant lacks
3 standing in this action. However, as discussed below, even were he able to allege a specific situation wherein nonpublication harmed or would harm him, he would be unable to state a viable cause of action.”

4 Schmier v. The Supreme Court of California, supra, 708.

5 In the instant case, plaintiff cannot have it both ways: he alleges that he is entitled to redress
6 because he was harmed by the state court’s citation rule, but disavows that he is seeking here to 7 overturn the state court appellate decision against him. If he has not asking this Court to reverse 8 the appellate decision, he has no standing because he cannot allege that he is injured by not being 9 allowed to cite the unpublished decision in an unrelated case (which is all that Rule 8.115 prohibits).

10 CONCLUSION

11 For the reasons set out above and in the moving papers, defendant Supreme Court of 12 California respectfully submits that the motion to dismiss should be granted.
